About the facility

Barwon Health Palliative Care provides palliative care nursing, medical, allied health and volunteer services within a framework of integrated health service involving close collaboration between community, inpatient as well as an acute consultative service. The model of palliative care is based on level of need and targets patients with complex care needs. The Community Palliative Care team is based at the McKellar Centre.

About the role

An exciting opportunity exists for a palliative medicine specialist to join the palliative care team at Barwon Health in a maternity leave relief role from mid-January 2019.

The successful applicant will be part of an integrated service providing palliative care to the Geelong region as well as surrounding districts. Embracing multi-disciplinary care the Barwon Health palliative care department encompasses a busy community palliative care service, a designated palliative care unit, a hospital-based consultancy team as well as a supportive role to sub-regional areas.

Research and medical education also represent strong components of the service.

If this sounds like the opportunity you have been waiting for, then apply today and join our dynamic and innovative organisation.

About the culture

We are a specialist interdisciplinary palliative care service, which is committed to providing an equitable, seamless, person centred approach, strengthened by education, research and development to support our community.
